

The American Political Science Association (APSA) invites you to a briefing on Capitol Hill

*The Midterm Forecasts Are In:
The Science of Election Forecasting, Part 2*

Like meteorologists who forecast the weather, political scientists forecast elections. Using scientific methods, we try to foresee outcomes — which party or candidate will win and by how much — before they happen. Join us to hear from six forecasters who will share their predictions for the upcoming midterm election.

Featuring

Alan Abramowitz (Emory University), James Campbell (University at Buffalo, SUNY),
Robert Erikson (Columbia University), Michael Lewis-Beck (University of Iowa),
John Sides (George Washington University), and Charles Tien (Hunter College & The Graduate Center, CUNY)*

Moderated by Paul Gronke (Reed College, Appalachian State University, and Co-Editor of PS: Political Science and Politics)

Wednesday, October 22, 2014

10:00 a.m. – 11:15 a.m.

Capitol Visitor Center, Room SVC 209-08

*Among the authors in the symposium “The 2014 Midterm Election Forecasts,” featured in the October 2014 issue of PS: Political Science & Politics.

RSVP (requested but not required) to Jgilad@apsanet.org